

What is our mission?

Foothills Child Advocacy Center provides a coordinated system of effective response and intervention to children who have been victimized. Our goals are to minimize trauma, promote healing, and ensure child safety.

All children are entitled to be safe, healthy, nurtured and valued.

How are children referred to Foothills?

It begins with a concerned adult who suspects abuse...

and makes a report to the local Child Protective Services or Police...

who then determine if an investigation is needed and, if so, make a referral to Foothills.

What happens at Foothills?

The family arrives at our child-friendly facility.

The caregivers meet with the child abuse team members. Then, the child is interviewed by Foothills' highly qualified forensic interviewer.

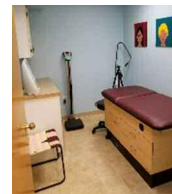

Forensic Interview Room

During the forensic interview, Foothills' family support staff meets with the caregivers to assess the family's needs and to provide crisis intervention, education, and referrals for services.

The interview is video and audio-recorded so that the child only needs to be interviewed once, reducing the trauma for the child.

The child may also receive a forensic medical evaluation and medical services.

After the interview and medical evaluation, the caregivers meet with the team again to discuss next steps.

What happens after Foothills?

The Charlottesville and Albemarle Multidisciplinary Team (MDT) is facilitated by Foothills staff and supports the child and family throughout the investigative process. Foothills' staff work with the families to ensure that they receive the services they need to keep the child safe and help the child to heal.

The MDT professionals meet monthly to review cases. They ask such questions as: Are there gaps in services? How is the family doing?

The Child Advocacy Center/ Multidisciplinary Team model is used nationwide and considered a best practice in helping child victims.

Who are our partners?

The Charlottesville and Albemarle Child Abuse Multidisciplinary Team (MDT):
