Leadership Charlottesville will help Foothills to increase awareness of child abuse and its prevention

(CHARLOTTESVILLE) – The Charlottesville Regional Chamber of Commerce Leadership Charlottesville Class of 2016 has selected Foothills Child Advocacy Center as one of four non-profit partners for community service projects.

The Leadership Charlottesville team of 8 class members will help Foothills to increase awareness of child abuse and its prevention in the community.

Cathee Johnson Phillips, Foothills’ executive director, said, “Foothills will be celebrating its 10th anniversary in April 2016, and we want to focus on public education and outreach in the coming months. We need to engage more adults in our community, because it is up to adults to stop and prevent child abuse. We’ve already met once with the Leadership Charlottesville team, and they are a great group. We are very excited and thankful to have their expert guidance and to partner with them.”
